

KPMG works with Staffcare as its employee benefits technology partner

Staffcare entered into a commercial partnership with KPMG in the UK to licence its flexible benefits and reward communication software to KPMG for use with their clients and their clients' employees.

KPMG is one of the leading advisors in the flexible benefits marketplace. To support the proposition of a complete and end to end service it required a strategic technology partner that could best meet its needs, and those of its clients, both now and in the future, and Staffcare was appointed as the preferred partner for KPMG going forward.

Philip Hollingdale, founder and CEO of Staffcare commented: "The appointment of KPMG as a strategic partner is clear confirmation that Staffcare is established as one of the leading suppliers of employee benefits technology. We are delighted to be working with KPMG – they are widely regarded as one of the leading advisors in the marketplace, and the combination of KPMG's consulting services and our technology provides a compelling choice for employers of all sizes."

Commenting on the agreement, Tony Morgan, Head of Flexible Benefits at KPMG said "Flexible Benefits is one of KPMG's key People Services offers, and in order to ensure that we continue to provide innovative, value for money programs to our clients we need to ensure that we continue to have the very best technology to allow us to deliver and administer these programs. The technology needs to be very versatile, easy to implement, cost effective and easy to use, and we feel that Staffcare is best placed to provide KPMG with such a platform to support the future growth of our business".

The contract is estimated to be worth in the region of £500,000 to Staffcare during the next three years.
